

Missouri Pre-Service Teacher Assessment (MoPTA)
Lesson Plan Format Modified

Grade Level: Advanced College Credit

Title of Lesson: “My desire to do this good work in America is not a vague one”: AP style rhetorical analysis

Summation of Lesson: In June of 1835, Countess de la Rochejaquelein wrote a letter to Bishop Rosati asking for the bishop to establish the Sisters of St. Joseph in St. Louis. Her letter navigates her role as an upper class woman to praise the work of women religious. This lesson asks the students to practice rhetorical analysis in the same way they are asked to demonstrate mastery of this skill on the AP Language & Composition exam.

Lesson Structure and Procedures

This lesson could be used at any time during AP practice (or not in the context of AP). Depending on where the class is with AP instruction, some of the following steps could be skipped. This could also be performed in groups if early on in the process of text prep.

1. Allow the students time to read the passage searching for the rhetorical situation
  - The students could use color pencils or highlighters to denote the different aspects they are finding in the letter (for example: use of pathos could be denoted in green while use of metaphors in orange)
  - Work as a class to discuss what the students found and check for correctness in labels
2. The students should then be given time to compose their response to the AP prompt.
  - The AP test only allots 40 minutes for both of these steps; however, students could be given more time if in early stages of prep—or this could be used as an independent assignment and timed.

Instructional Strategies

- Depending on when assignment is given—the teacher will check for mastery of terms as the students search for rhetorical devices and/or will provide feedback on written essays.

Learning Activities

- Search and define terms
- Written response

Resources and Materials

- Digital copies of sections of letter
- AP style worded assignment (direct wording above in Assessment)
